This is a civil rights action brought by a state prisoner pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983. The court has granted Plaintiff leave to proceed in forma pauperis, and Plaintiff has paid the initial partial filing fee. Under the Prison Litigation Reform Act, PUB. L. NO. 104-134, 110 STAT. 1321 (1996) (“PLRA”), the court is required to dismiss any prisoner action brought under federal law if the complaint is frivolous, malicious, fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, or seeks monetary relief from a defendant immune from such relief. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(c); 28 U.S.C. §§ 1915(e)(2), 1915A. The court must read Plaintiff’s pro se complaint indulgently, see Haines v. Kerner, 404 U.S. 519, 520, 92 S. Ct. 594, 595 (1972), and accept Plaintiff’s allegations as true, unless they are clearly irrational or wholly incredible. Denton v. Hernandez, 504 U.S. 25, 33, 112 S. Ct. 1728, 1733 (1992). Applying these standards, the court will dismiss Plaintiff’s complaint for failure to state a claim.

Discussion

I. Factual Allegations

Plaintiff Howard L. Irvin, an inmate at the Pugsley Correctional Facility, filed this pro se civil rights action pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 against Defendant Corrections Officer Steven Morrison, who was employed at the Straits Correctional Facility during the pertinent time period. Plaintiff alleges in his complaint that on June 3, 2003, while he was incarcerated at the Straits Correctional Facility, he was approached by Defendant Morrison and told to get out of bed and do a practice pack-up in order to determine whether his property exceeded allowable limits. As Plaintiff was getting dressed, he asked to use the restroom. Defendant denied Plaintiff's request, and became angry and belligerent when Plaintiff made subsequent requests.

Plaintiff claims that there is an "unwritten policy or custom" that inmates without underlying medical issues can be denied use of the restroom until the completion of a mock pack-up. Plaintiff states that he became angry when he realized that Defendant was harassing him and repeatedly requested to speak to the Assistant Resident Unit Supervisor. Defendant finally granted Plaintiff's request and Plaintiff told Assistant Resident Unit Supervisor Gilroy that he was being harassed. Plaintiff then completed the pack-up, which took 35-40 minutes and Plaintiff was then permitted to use the restroom. Once Plaintiff's footlockers and duffle bag were full, excess items were confiscated as contraband. Among the items Defendant confiscated were three Bibles, an original King James version, a revised King James version, and a New American Bible. Plaintiff claims he needed the Bibles in order to do a comparative study and gain a better understanding of Christianity. Plaintiff states that when he requested an itemized list of the property being taken, Defendant ignored the request. Plaintiff believes that the Bibles were discarded.

Plaintiff filed grievances regarding the denial of bathroom privileges for approximately 35 minutes and the loss of the three Bibles. Plaintiff's grievances were denied at steps I, II and III. According to the Step II Grievance Response to KTF-03-06-405-17a, which is attached as an exhibit to Plaintiff's complaint, Defendant denied that Plaintiff ever asked to use the bathroom and further noted that a delay of 35 minutes for using the bathroom should not be a problem unless there were medical issues involved. With regard to the confiscation of the Bibles, MDOC Director Jim Armstrong responded to the step III grievance appeal in KTF-03-06-409-7d, which is attached to Plaintiff's complaint, by stating:

The grievant alleges that on 6-3-03 Officer Morrison conducted a mock pack-up in which several items were confiscated without completion of a contraband removal slip. Grievant alleges that most of the items were returned to the grievant over the next several days, however, three Bibles were never returned. Grievant seeks as relief that Officer Morrison be disciplined.

This investigator has reviewed the record presented with the appeal to Step Three. All relevant information was considered. Based on this review, this writer finds the response provided at Step Two adequately addresses the merits of the main issue grieved.

The record presented with the appeal does not suggest that further action is justified at this level. The grievant has presented insufficient evidence to refute staff statements that the Bibles were the property of various religious groups with which the grievant was involved. As indicated in the Step Two response, staff have been reminded of the provisions set forth in PD 04.07.112 "Prisoner Personal Property" regarding completion of the proper paperwork when items believed to be contraband are removed from a prisoner's room or cell. No further action is necessary. Corrective action is an administrative prerogative and is not granted as relief to a grievance appeal. Based on the above finding, we deny the grievance appeal.

Plaintiff claims that Defendant's conduct violated his rights under the First, Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments. Plaintiff seeks damages.

II. Failure to state a claim

A complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted when it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations of the complaint. Jones v. City of Carlisle, 3 F.3d 945, 947 (6th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1177, 114 S. Ct. 1218 (1994). To state a claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, a plaintiff must allege the violation of a right secured by the federal Constitution or laws and must show that the deprivation was committed by a person acting under color of state law. West v. Atkins, 487 U.S. 42, 48, 108 S. Ct. 2250, 2255 (1988); Street v. Corrections Corp. of America, 102 F.3d 810, 814 (6th Cir. 1996). Because § 1983 is a method for vindicating federal rights, not a source of substantive rights itself, the first step in an action under § 1983 is to identify the specific constitutional right allegedly infringed. Albright v. Oliver, 510 U.S. 266, 271, 114 S. Ct. 807, 811 (1994).

Plaintiff claims that Defendant's conduct violated his rights under the Eighth Amendment. The Eighth Amendment imposes a constitutional limitation on the power of the states to punish those convicted of crimes. Punishment may not be "barbarous" nor may it contravene society's "evolving standards of decency." Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 346 (1981). The Amendment, therefore, prohibits conduct by prison officials that involves the "unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain." Ivey v. Wilson, 832 F.2d 950, 954 (6th Cir. 1987) (per curiam) (quoting Rhodes, 452 U.S. at 346). The deprivation alleged "must result in the denial of 'the minimal civilized measure of life's necessities.'" Rhodes, 452 U.S. at 347; see also Wilson v. Yaklich, 148 F.3d 596, 600-601 (6th Cir. 1998). The Eighth Amendment is only concerned with "deprivations of essential food, medical care, or sanitation" or "other conditions intolerable for prison confinement." Rhodes, 452 U.S. at 348. Moreover, "Not every unpleasant experience a prisoner might endure while incarcerated constitutes cruel and unusual punishment within the meaning of the Eighth Amendment.” Ivey, 832 F.2d at 954.

The court notes that allegations about temporary inconveniences, such as being deprived of a lower bunk, subjected to a flooded cell, or deprived of a working toilet, do not demonstrate that the conditions fell beneath the minimal civilize measure of life’s necessities as measured by a contemporary standard of decency. Dellis v. Corrections Corp. of America, 257 F.3d 508, 511 (6th Cir. 2001). In this case, Plaintiff’s allegations do not amount to anything more than a temporary inconvenience. Accordingly, Plaintiff’s claim that he was forced to wait for 35 minutes to use the restroom does not rise to the level of an Eighth Amendment violation.

In addition, the court notes that Plaintiff is seeking damages in this case. With regard to Plaintiff’s Eighth Amendment claims, Plaintiff’s claims are barred by 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e). Section § 1997e(e) provides as follows:

No federal action may be brought by a prisoner confined in a jail, prison, or other correctional facility, for mental or emotional injury suffered while in custody without a prior showing of physical injury.

Id. The Sixth Circuit repeatedly has held, albeit in unpublished decisions, that Eighth Amendment claims for monetary relief based on mental or emotional injury are precluded by § 1997e(e) absent a showing of physical injury. See, e.g., Merchant v. Hawk-Sawyer, No. 01-6244, 2002 WL 927026, at *2 (6th Cir. May 7, 2002); Garrison v. Walters, No. 00-1662, 2001 WL 1006271, at *2 (6th Cir. Aug. 24, 2001); Robinson v. Corrections Corp. of America, No. 99-5741, 2001 WL 857204, at *1 (6th Cir. June 20, 2001); Oliver v. Sundquist, No. 00-6372, 2001 WL 669994, at *2 (6th Cir. June 7, 2001); Williams v. Ollis, Nos. 99-2168, 99-2234, 2000 WL 1434459 (6th Cir. Sept. 2000); Raines-Bey v. Garber, No. 99-1471, 2000 WL 658721, at *1 (6th Cir. May 12, 2000). Therefore, because Plaintiff has not alleged that he suffered any physical injury as a result of Defendant's alleged misconduct, his Eighth Amendment claim is properly dismissed.

Plaintiff first contends that the Defendant has violated his First Amendment right to freely practice his religion. Prisoners do not lose their right to freely exercise their religion by virtue of their incarceration. Cruz v. Beto, 405 U.S. 319, 322, n. 2 (1972). Freedom of religion being a fundamental right, any regulation which infringes upon it must generally be justified by a "compelling state interest". See, for example, Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205 (1972). However, as a prisoner, Plaintiff's constitutional rights are subject to severe restriction. See, for example, Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520 (1979) (restriction on receipt of reading materials); Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517 (1984) (privacy); Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 566 (1974) (right to call witnesses); Richardson v. Ramirez, 418 U.S. 24 (1974) (vote). See, generally, Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210 (1990); Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78 (1987); O'Lone v. Estate of Shabazz, 482 U.S. 342 (1987).

Rather, the standard by which prison regulations impinging on prisoner constitutional rights is judged is "reasonableness." Turner, 482 U.S. at 88-95; Washington, 494 U.S. at 223-25. In Turner, the Supreme Court expressly rejected any degree of "heightened scrutiny" in order to assure that "prison administrators . . . and not the courts . . . make the difficult judgments concerning institutional operations." Id. at 89, quoting Jones v. North Carolina Prisoners' Union, 433 U.S. 119 (1977).

In Turner, the court set forth four factors "relevant in determining the reasonableness of the regulation at issue." 482 U.S. at 89-91. First, there must be a "valid, rational connection" between the prison regulation and the legitimate governmental interest put forward to justify it. Id. at 89, quoting Block v. Rutherford, 468 U.S. 576, 586 (1984). Second, the reasonableness of a restriction takes into account whether there are “alternative means of exercising the right that remain open to the prison inmate.” Turner, 482 U.S. at 90. Third, the court should consider the “impact accommodation of the asserted constitutional right will have on guards and other inmates, and on the allocation of prison resources generally.” Turner, 482 U.S. at 90. Finally, the existence or absence of ready alternatives of accommodating the prisoner’s rights is relevant to reasonableness. Turner, 482 U.S. at 90. As stated by the court, this final factor “is not a ‘least restrictive alternative’ test.” Id. at 90. “Prison officials need not show that “no reasonable method exists by which [prisoners’] rights can be accommodated without creating bona fide [prison] problems.” O’Lone v. Estate of Shabazz, 482 U.S. 342, 350 (1987).

The court notes that Plaintiff in this case does not claim he was deprived of his only Bible. Rather, the confiscated Bibles were additional volumes, and were merely distinguished by the fact that they were different versions of the Bible. Plaintiff claims that the confiscation of such books interferes with his ability to engage in a comparative study of the Bible. However, Plaintiff fails to allege any facts indicating that such study is necessary to his ability to practice his religion. Therefore, Plaintiff’s claim that Defendant violated his First Amendment rights is without merit.

Plaintiff’s due process claim is barred by the doctrine of Parratt v. Taylor, 451 U.S. 527 (1981), overruled in part by Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327 (1986). Under Parratt, a person deprived of property by a “random and unauthorized act” of a state employee has no federal due-process claim unless the state fails to afford an adequate post-deprivation remedy. If an adequate post-deprivation remedy exists, the deprivation, although real, is not “without due process of law.” Parratt, 451 U.S. at 537. This rule applies to both negligent and intentional deprivation of property, as long as the deprivation was not done pursuant to an established state procedure. See Hudson v.

Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 530-36 (1984); Mitchell v. Fankhauser, 375 F.3d 477, 483-84 (6th Cir. 2004). Because Plaintiff's claim is premised upon allegedly unauthorized negligent acts of a state official, he must plead and prove the inadequacy of state post-deprivation remedies. See Copeland v. Machulis, 57 F.3d 476, 479-480 (6th Cir. 1995); Gibbs v. Hopkins, 10 F.3d 373, 378 (6th Cir. 1993). Under settled Sixth Circuit authority, a prisoner's failure to sustain this burden requires dismissal of his § 1983 due-process action. See Brooks v. Dutton, 751 F.2d 197 (6th Cir. 1985).

Plaintiff has not sustained his burden in this case. Plaintiff has not alleged that state post-deprivation remedies are inadequate. Moreover, numerous state post-deprivation remedies are available to him. First, a prisoner who incurs a loss through no fault of his own may petition the institution's Prisoner Benefit Fund for compensation. MICH. DEP'T OF CORR., Policy Directive 04.07.112 ¶ II(B) (effective Sept. 24, 1998). Aggrieved prisoners may also submit claims for property loss of less than $1,000 to the State Administrative Board. MICH. COMP. LAWS § 600.6419; Policy Directive, 04.07.112 ¶ II(B). Alternatively, Michigan law authorizes actions in the Court of Claims asserting tort or contract claims "against the state and any of its departments, commissions, boards, institutions, arms, or agencies." MICH. COMP. LAWS § 600.6419(1)(a); see Green v. State Corrections Dep't, 192 N.W.2d 491 (Mich. 1971) (state liable for tortuous injury sustained by a sentenced convict at the Detroit House of Correction). The Sixth Circuit has specifically held that Michigan provides adequate post-deprivation remedies for deprivation of property. See Copeland, 57 F.3d at 480. Plaintiff does not allege any reason why a state-court action would not afford him complete relief for the deprivation, either negligent or intentional, of his personal property. Accordingly, Plaintiff's due process claims will be dismissed.

To the extent that Plaintiff is claiming his state law rights were violated, the court refuses to exercise pendent jurisdiction over such claims. Claims raising issues of state law are best left to determination by the state courts, particularly in the area of prison administration. In addition, pendent jurisdiction over state law claims cannot be exercised after all federal claims have been dismissed. United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726-727 (1966); Smith v. Freland, 954 F.2d 343, 348 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 504 U.S. 915 (1992).

That power need not be exercised in every case in which it is found to exist. It has consistently been recognized that pendent jurisdiction is a doctrine of discretion, not of plaintiff's right. Its justification lies in considerations of judicial economy, convenience and fairness to litigants; if these are not present a federal court should hesitate to exercise jurisdiction over state claims, even though bound to apply state law to them, Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817, 82 L. Ed. 1188. Needless decisions of state law should be avoided both as a matter of comity and to promote justice between the parties, by procuring for them a surer-footed reading of applicable law. Certainly, if the federal claims are dismissed before trial, even though not insubstantial in a jurisdictional sense, the state claims should be dismissed as well. Similarly, if it appears that the state issues substantially predominate, whether in terms of proof, of the scope of the issues raised, or of the comprehensiveness of the remedy sought, the state claims may be dismissed without prejudice and left for resolution to state tribunals.

United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726-727 (1966).

Conclusion

Having conducted the review now required by the Prison Litigation Reform Act, the court determines that Plaintiff's action fails to state a claim and will therefore be dismissed pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1915(e)(2), 1915A(b); 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(c).

The court must next decide whether an appeal of this action would be in good faith within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. § 1915(a)(3). See McGore v. Wrigglesworth, 114 F.3d 601, 611

(6th Cir. 1997). For the same reasons that the court dismisses the action, the court discerns no good-faith basis for an appeal. Should Plaintiff appeal this decision, the court will assess the appellate filing fee pursuant to § 1915(b)(1), see McGore, 114 F.3d at 610-11, unless Plaintiff is barred from proceeding in forma pauperis, e.g., by the “three-strikes” rule of § 1915(g). If he is barred, he will be required to pay the appellate filing fee in one lump sum.

This dismissal counts as a strike for purposes of 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g).

A judgment consistent with this opinion will be entered.
